The Child Advocacy Clinic is an externship clinic where students conduct fieldwork under the supervision of a practicing attorney. For more information about this clinic, please visit the Clinic Website, Clinic Q&A and OCP Blog Highlights.

The Child Advocacy Clinic is an externship clinic where students conduct fieldwork under the supervision of a practicing attorney.

In the Xi era, China has started to cast aside the long-standing maxim of “keeping a low profile and biding one’s time” in international relations.

The term “citizenship” has many meanings in sociology, political theory, and law. It can denote a relationship to a polity, a set of rights and duties, or a legal status.

This is a course about the processes that courts follow in deciding disputes in noncriminal cases. It deals with the way in which courts interpret the law.

This course covers what should, should not, and does happen when someone files (or considers filing) a civil lawsuit.

The course in Civil Procedure is a survey course on the processes for addressing and resolving civil disputes. Part of the course will focus on the rules of civil procedure.

This course examines the theory and practice of civil litigation, and the rules and statutes that govern the process by which civil disputes are resolved.

An introduction to federal civil procedure.

This course provides an introduction to civil procedure. It will examine the law governing civil litigation (mainly in federal court) and the role of the courts.

This course covers what should, should not, and does happen when someone files (or considers filing) a civil lawsuit.

This course will provide an overview of the history, policies and legal challenges related to integrating the armed forces with the civilian population.

In developing rules for the enforcement of constitutional and statutory civil rights through civil actions, the Supreme Court has played a central role.

This course will focus on current topics in federal class action litigation through an experiential lens. In addition to readings and lectures, students will engage in experiential learning.

This course will examine the indispensable role of the Rule of Law in free societies. We will first explore the nature of the Rule of Law and then its application.

This seminar will operate as a lab and explore entrepreneurial efforts to bridge climate change and human rights by examining the role of law.

As climate change has increasingly come to be seen as an urgent global problem, there has been a turn to international law for solutions.

The bankruptcy system is generally considered part of commercial law in America, a safety valve for overindebted individuals and businesses.

This course explores the law surrounding secured transactions, a type of loan used by individuals, businesses of all sizes, and governments.

This course will introduce students to the role that written, oral, and multi-media communications play in the development of the legal system.

Many jurisdictions are coming to grips with AI, with a flurry of regulatory proposals highlighting the challenges of legislating in the face of rapid technological change.

A recent wave of conservative populism has brought a sharp backlash against sexual and reproductive health and rights (SRHR) in many countries.

This course is a study of constitutional law and politics from a comparative perspective. It has three features that make it different from other courses.

The business corporation is a central institution in the modern capitalist economy. There are, however, considerable differences in the way it is organized and operated.

This course uses the example of China as a springboard for asking fundamental questions about the nature of law, and the role of the courts.

This course will study legal doctrines, litigation strategies (viewed from both plaintiff and defendant perspectives) and current issues in litigation.

This seminar explores legal entities—principally, but not exclusively, the corporation—from a variety of perspectives. The course will focus on the corporation as a legal entity.

A study of the special problems that arise when a case is connected with more than one state or nation. Topics include choice of law, jurisdiction, and the recognition and enforcement of foreign judgments.

This course examines how courts choose which law should be applied to transactions, relationships, or occurrences having cross-border dimensions.

This seminar will examine the history of conservative thought in the United States in an effort to understand the modern conservative movement.

This course considers, from the perspective of social and political history, American constitutional development from the American Revolution to the present.

This course provides an introduction to the U.S. Constitution – the government structures it establishes and contemplates, and the rights and liberties it defines.

This course provides an introduction to the structure of the U.S. Constitution and the rights and liberties it defines. Topics include federalism, the separation of powers, and the Bill of Rights.

In this class, we will develop a conception of constitutional interpretation that explains — and maybe justifies — the Court’s decisions.

This course provides an introduction to the structure of the U.S. Constitution and the rights and liberties it defines. Topics include federalism, the separation of powers, and the Bill of Rights.

This course provides an introduction to constitutional law. Major topics include judicial review, federalism, the separation of powers, and the Bill of Rights.

This course provides an introduction to the structure of the U.S. Constitution and the rights and liberties it defines. Topics include federalism, the separation of powers, and the Bill of Rights.

This course provides an introduction to the structure of the U.S. Constitution and the rights and liberties it defines. Topics include federalism, the separation of powers, and the Bill of Rights.

This course is one of two basic courses in Constitutional Law. We will study the Freedom of Speech in many different contexts and the role of the courts.

This course will deal principally with the Free Speech Clause of the First Amendment. Free Exercise and Establishment Clause issues will be covered as well.

This is one of the basic courses in the field. It addresses the Freedom of Speech, the Free Exercise of Religion and the Establishment Clause.

This course is one of the two basic courses in the field: it focuses on the First Amendment and deals with the Freedom of Speech, the Free Exercise of Religion and the Establishment Clause.

This course focuses on the structure of the United States government, including the doctrines of separation of powers and federalism.

Half of the seats in this offering will be held for students admitted by permission of the instructor. Students who want to apply for permission should contact the instructor.
